

Performance.gov provides a window into the inner workings of the Federal Government, showing visitors the goals and objectives government agencies are working to accomplish, how they seek to accomplish them, and why these efforts are important.

All cabinet departments and nine other major agencies, like the EPA and NASA, have agency pages on Performance.gov. Each agency's page provides an overview of the agency, its mission, priority goals to be achieved, and links to its strategic and performance plans and reports.

Performance.gov allows the public, including researchers and scholars, to learn more about the President's Management Agenda and the Agency Priority Goals that are being used to advance government progress.

Lastly, Performance.gov hosts a repository of blog posts, videos, and social campaigns telling the stories of the humans behind our Federal Government.

On Performance.gov you can:

- Learn more about government performance
- Read our blog how Federal agencies are serving the American people
- See a visualization of agency goals across government
- Participate in a Campaign
- Check out the President's Management Agenda

Also, be sure to check out our Twitter and LinkedIn!